

Daily Routine

DAILY SCRUM
ABSURD ANSWERS

Check the live version of an app!

by buildit @ wipro digital

Every story has a beginning.

A few months ago, when coming back from a team meetup, we had an interesting conversation on the train: how to spot an underperforming team member?

One of the arguments was that in the era of scrum you have a daily scrum meeting that controls progress on the tasks and puts a solid dose of peer pressure on each team member.

Counterargument was that when you are working on a pathological project, you could easily play on a console or table football at the office all day long and fake your status update – scrum master wouldn't even notice if that is a true or a made-up tech mumbo-jumbo.

Maybe it's even possible to write a simple app that will throw out a status update that even engineers on the team won't be able to question.

Bragging?
Underestimating scrum masters and PMs? Let's call a bluff!

There was no other way to settle the argument than to run an experiment...

Photo taken in train during journey from the first BuildIt Poland face-to-face meetup in Warsaw. Hangover was real.

Meet the Team.

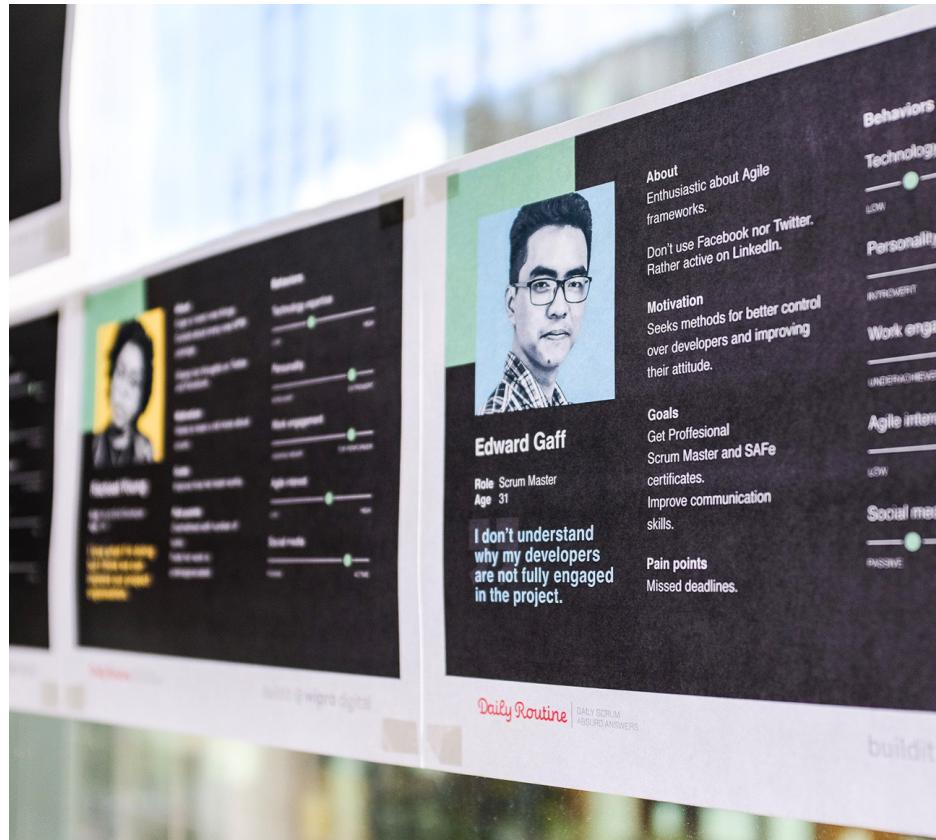

by buildit @ wipro digital

After releasing MVP, in one of the not-so-sunny August 2019 afternoons, we finally gathered everyone involved in the project in one room.

From left to right:
Przemysław Popowicz,
Lech Wypychowski,
Marcin Goławski,
Michał Pieniążek
(hologram),
Maciej Hein,
Mateusz Łachacz,
Marek Mollin

Prototyping before coding.

Before writing even one line of code we prepared interactive prototype in InVision and gathered helpful feedback about overall user experience.

Important part of pre-production process was defining potential users proto-personas.

Next step was setting up backlog in Jira and project board on the Gdańsk office's windows.

by buildit @ wipro digital

Design Driven Delivery.

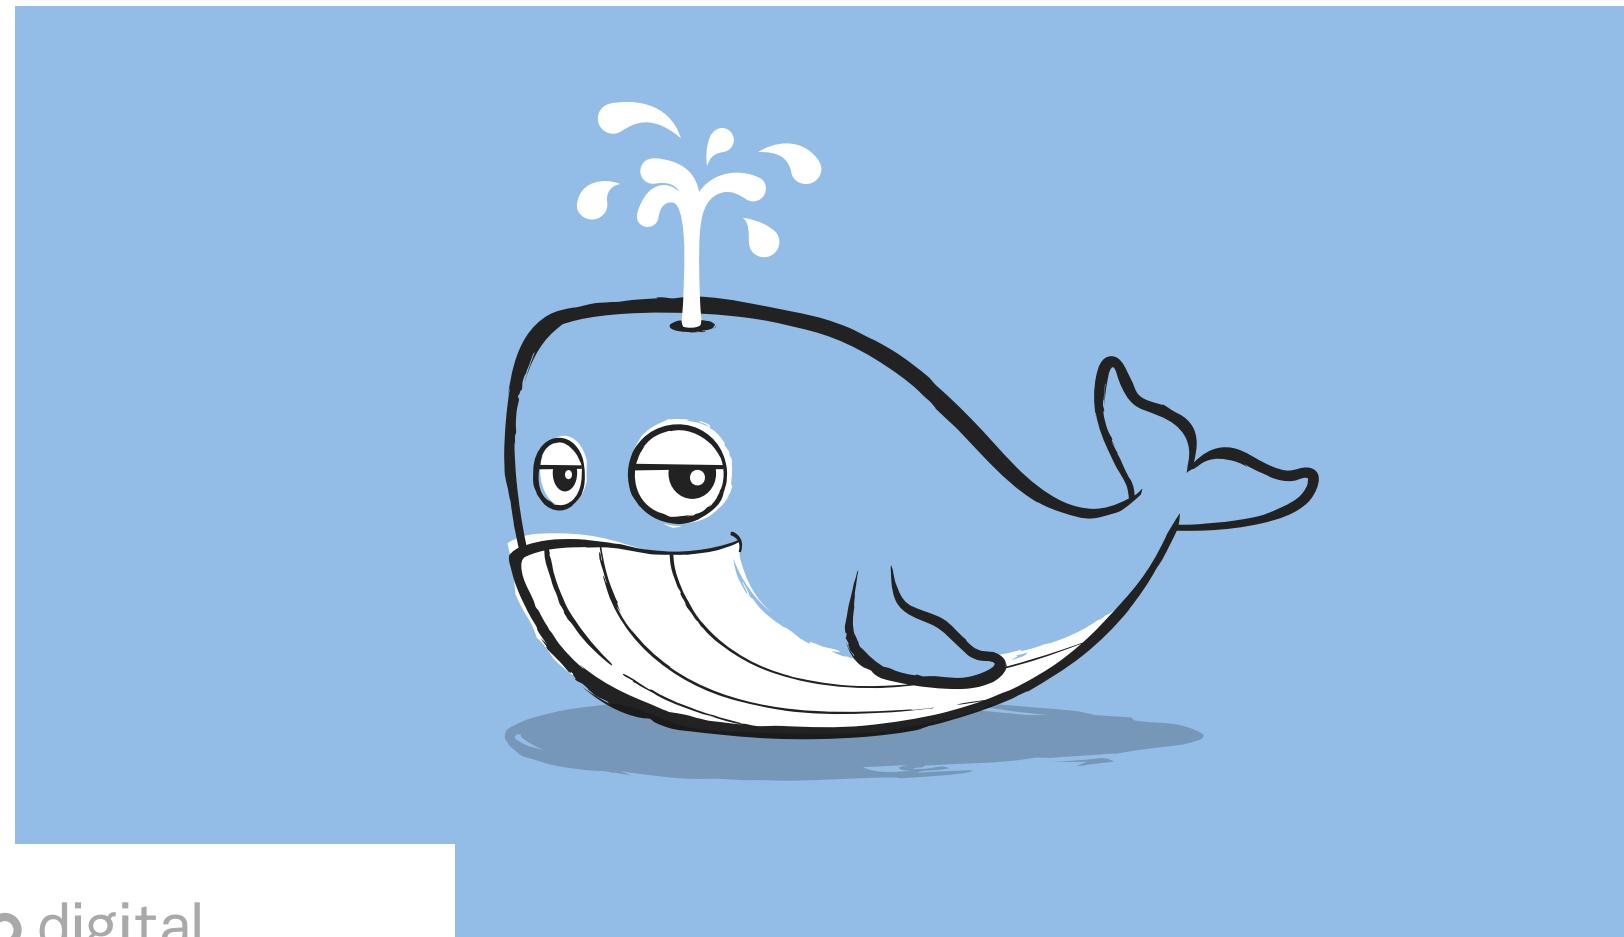

by buildit @ wipro digital

Thanks to everyone involved!

After 2 months of hard work we finally released MVP.

But we have a feeling it's just a beginning. If you spotted a bug, have an interesting feature in mind or just want to add a new daily quote, don't shy away and contribute!

by buildit @ wipro digital